Chapel Hill's Institute for Genome Sciences is ranked third among the top 10 universities worldwide in the field of genomic medicine, according to the 2019 edition of U.S. News & World Report's "Best Graduate Schools" guide. The ranking was announced today by U.S. News & World Report (UNW).
"It's great news that UNC-CH has been ranked in the top three this year," said U.S. News Editor-in-Chief Sharon Gold. "UNC-CH has been world renowned for its successful genomics research and training programs that are constantly boosting the quality of medical care in this country." UNC-CH's rankings are based on reputation as measured by the number of genomic researchers and their publications, as well as the school's medical system, equipment and facilities, and program quality.
"We are extremely proud of our 3rd-place ranking by U.S. News among the top 10 universities worldwide in genomic medicine," said

The invention has particular application in the field of liquid chromatography, e.g. to determine the composition of a liquid sample, such as blood or fluid. Recently, organic solvents have come to be used increasingly as mobile-phase solvents in chromatography. For example, in liquid chromatography on a packed liquid chromatography column such as a C8 reversed-phase column, organic solvents such as acetone
